

as soon as she is acquitted. She will go to Washington. Her mother cannot live long and Nan will remain with her to the end. Then she will live with me. It is to be a new life for her.

"She will not return to the stage. She has had offers of $1,000 a week from several reputable managers, but all have been refused. I can truly say that my daughter has left her past life behind her, and from the time of her acquittal will live a quiet, retired life.

"Both Nan and myself are well pleased with the jury, and we do not think that the trial will last long."

Wants to Testify.

In speaking of her case today Miss Patterson said:

"I see no reason why I should not go on the witness stand and tell the world the truth. I am innocent, and on that account I am not afraid to face the jury which has been selected. I want no consideration or pity in the trial, but I do want justice. I know I am held a prisoner charged with murder unjustly, and I know there is no reason why I should do anything which might harm my case, or prove of advantage to the prosecution.

Miss Patterson has carefully saved all the newspaper clippings about herself and the tragedy, since she was arrested last June. The collection she now has is a huge one, and has filled several scrapbooks.

From a person who is closely interested in the case it was learned today that the prosecution has thirty witnesses. Nevertheless, Abraham Levy, chief counsel for Miss Patterson, said that he expects the case to end by Thanksgiving Day, and that he has no fear as to the outcome.

MOB ATTACKS ALLEGED WOMAN GRAVE ROBBER

Aged Maud Forsyth Severely Injured in Her Shanty in Turner Avenue.

Taken to Hospital.

Enraged because she had been accused of being a grave robber and persisted in living in their locality a mob of Italians, Armenians, negroes and Hungarians attacked aged Maud Forsyth at 123 Turner Street last night. The mob bombarded her shanty, one brick striking her, tearing open her scalp. She was removed to the Casualty Hospital. The police of the Ninth Precinct dispersed the mob.

The woman in bygone years, with a man named Brown, was frequently arrested for robbing graves, and on several occasions was convicted. Her present home is near a cemetery, and the ignorant denizens of the neighborhood believed her to be still obtaining bodies for medical colleges. The belief culminated in the attack last night.

PANAMA TROOPS IN REVOLT AGAIN

Mobs Surround Palace and Demand Back Pay.

AMERICAN MARINES READY

Admiral Goodrich Ready to Land Force if Needed—Police Rounding Up the Soldiers.

PANAMA, Nov. 19.—Recent events in Panama have stirred the populace to feverish excitement, and while the authorities have so far been able to preserve order the possibility of trouble over the relegation of the troops to the police ranks is not yet removed.

The abandonment of the fortress at Chetiqui was the signal for minor demonstrations. Shortly after groups of soldiers assembled in front of the palace, and when a sufficient number had arrived the men began to clamor for their pay up to date.

Pay Promised.

Minister of State and War Guardia, accompanied by President Amador and United States Minister Barrett appeared on the balcony and Senator Guardia addressed the troops.

He admonished them to keep the peace, pointing out the reasons for the government's action, and assuring them that employment would be found for them in the public service.

President Amador then gave orders in full hearing of the men, for their payment. The former soldiers were apparently satisfied, and dispersed.

Later the same day the demonstrations in the cafes and barrooms proved vain, however, for by previous order all resorts of this character had been ordered closed until next Tuesday. The authorities believe that by that time all traces of dissatisfaction will have disappeared.

Americans Ready.

The barracks were today occupied by several detachments of police under command of President Amador's secretary, Lefevre.

Further police details have been summoned from Colon by telegraph and a special train is now being dispatched from that city. The men will be armed with rifles. The fire brigade has also received orders to be in readiness for any emergency.

Hear Admiral Goodrich is reported to stand ready to send additional marines on shore, but is at present refraining from such action.

A line of steam barges and tugboats has been pressed into commission, however, for the landing of more men.

UNITED STATES BLOCKS SCHEME

The United States Government will permit no interference with the existing government of the Republic of Panama.

"This decision was made manifest yesterday when the State Department made public certain facts relating to the recent attempted revolution, and placed a stamp of approval upon the action of the United States Government in effectually preventing the overthrow of the present government there."

Administration Maintained.

These developments give positive assurance that the isthmian canal will be constructed without interference and that the new republic of Panama will be maintained in its present form if it requires the full power of this Government to enforce this decision.

Fortunately for this Government, Minister Barrett at Panama, had preceded the President's special envoy by several weeks. It was his presence at Panama and his prompt action that will enable Secretary Taft to deal with a fully recognized government instead of an insurrectionary one.

According to the information made public by the Department of State yesterday, General Huerta, who was in command of the army, had President Amador absolutely under his control. He had secured the dismissal of the secretary of state and secretary of the treasury, and was hatching up further plans for a reorganization of the cabinet, when Minister Barrett interfered.

The minister, casting aside all diplomatic red tape, notified President Amador that the United States Government would countenance no disorder or give sanction to readjustment of government by force.

The firm stand taken by this Government will show President Amador that his interests lie with the United States Government, and that he need fear no uprising from hot-headed residents of the Latin-American republics.

MISSOURI STATE BUILDING BURNS

Fire Destroys Ellice at the World's Fair.

THE TAVERN WING IS SAVED

Marines and Firemen Fight Hard to Get the Flames Under Control.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 19.—The Missouri Building at the World's Fair was partially destroyed by fire this evening. The fire broke out at 6:30 o'clock. It was discovered by Robert M. La Follette, Jr., son of Wisconsin's governor. He was just coming from the building when he saw flames issuing from the basement window and immediately turned in an alarm.

The origin is in doubt, some claiming that it was caused by defective electric wiring, others that it broke out in the kitchen under the assembly hall. At the first alarm the marines, camping nearby, rushed to the building and succeeded in saving the costly furniture, paintings and hangings in the building, as well as the library.

The incandescent of the building caused the flames to spread rapidly. At 7 o'clock the beautiful gilded dome fell.

The Center Destroyed.

The fire companies of the World's Fair worked heroically and by 8 o'clock had succeeded in getting the fire under control. The tavern wing of the building escaped almost without damage. The western wing is badly scorched and center entirely gutted. A brisk south wind was blowing at the time and greatly endangered the United States Government Building. Just north of the Missouri Building. A bucket brigade of the marines kept the roof well saturated, however.

The Missouri Building cost $105,000. The Iowa and Arkansas Buildings were offered the Missouri Commission for use until the close of the fair.

where he killed his brother-brood-by and bade his other relatives adieu. Flanked on either side by an arm of the law, he walked to a street car and went to the Baltimore and Ohio station.

Motion for New Trial.

When McGregor and Upton were convicted on a charge of entering into a conspiracy with a leather manufacturer in Baltimore whereby they would get a certain per cent of the exorbitant price paid for leather straps on which leather carriers carry their sacks, their attorneys filed motions for new trials.

Upton's counsel finally abandoned the motion, and he began serving his sentence soon after conviction. McGregor's lawyers fought the case every step of the way, and it finally landed in the United States Court of Appeals. The motion to have the defendant tried again was overruled.

District Attorney John C. Rose, upon learning that the Court of Appeals had declined to overrule the lower court began a search for the convicted man. He learned that McGregor was in Washington, and assigned Langhammer to come to Washington with a leather manufacturer in Maryland, and to take McGregor to the United States Marshal Aulick Palmer, in the City Hall, for assistance, and several deputies, among whom was Cusick, were ordered to go to the house and prevent the prisoner from escaping. Deputies were placed at each door and also under the windows. While they stood guard to prevent an escape Langhammer and Cusick entered the house, and experienced no trouble in getting the man to accompany them.

EXTRACTS FROM THE SPEECHES.

President Roosevelt:

"Each nation has its allotted tasks to do; each nation has its peculiar difficulties to encounter; and as the peoples of the world tend to become more closely knit together alike for good and for evil, it becomes ever more important to all that each should prosper; for the prosperity of one is normally not a sign of menace but a sign of hope for the rest."

"As the years go by it becomes not harder but easier to live in peace and good will among ourselves; and I firmly believe that it will also become not harder but easier to dwell in peace and friendship with the other nations of the earth."

Baron Sternburg:

"May the spirit of this hero inspire those men who are to stand as the pillars of the army of the United States with those qualities which made the Iron Hohenzollern great among leaders and which alone render armies mighty and invincible."

Lieutenant General Von Lowenfeld:

"The Emperor is of the conviction that, God willing, this statue will remain as a lasting pledge for the continuance of the friendly relations between America and Germany—relations for which the foundation was laid in the days of King Frederick."

Lieutenant General Chaffee:

"Unfortunately, the admiration which we have for his genius military, no artist can illustrate in bronze or marble."

"Statues of greatly distinguished men serve as indicators and point to sources of knowledge in the ascertainment of true principles."

Charlemagne Tower:

"I had the occasion as an additional bond of good understanding between the two nations, upon the eve of the new Administration of President Roosevelt."

PEACE---THE THEME OF UNVEILING ADDRESS

ed with a long plume, made him a picturesque figure. His short German speech was delivered in strident tones and the words were so far apart that one could imagine the officer was delivering orders to a large body of soldiers.

The Diplomatic Corps, with the exception of military and naval attaches, did not wear the uniform of their rank. The failure of the foreign representatives to lay aside somber black clothes for the bright colored attire they wear on state occasions caused much comment.

For weeks there had been much discussion among the diplomats as to the proper attire for yesterday's ceremonies. Several of the diplomats asked for information on this subject from the State Department. Others applied to the White House.

But all were told that this Government has no time for regulating the dress of the diplomatic body. Consequently, the matter was settled by the Diplomatic Corps, and the dean undoubtedly ruled that the unveiling was not a function which called for uniforms.

Not What He Hoped.

The worst disappointed person at the unveiling was an old negro who managed to get standing room near the flag-draped statue. He arrived early, and watched the guests of honor with much interest as they took their places in the grandstand. He was patient while Bishop Satterlee pronounced the invocation, and awaited eagerly the end of Major General Gillespie's little speech introducing the German ambassador.

His eyes opened wide as she pulled the ropes which raised the German and American flags from the bronze and exposed the lower part of the statue. But when the jaw of the figure was uncovered, he uttered a groan of disappointment.

"Hain't Frederick Douglas, and they all said it was," he exclaimed.

Perfect Weather.

The disappointment of the old negro was not shared, however, by the 4,000 spectators who gathered at Washington Barracks to see Emperor William's gift to the United States formally presented.

Dewey Delays M. Jusserand

Admiral Dewey and M. Jusserand, the French ambassador, met on the stairway leading from the platform after the ceremonies.

The ambassador seemed particularly anxious that his carriage should appear promptly and exhibited signs of impatience because it did not. He was evidently in no mood to tarry.

Admiral Dewey, however, apparently did not notice M. Jusserand's air of pre-occupation, and in his hearty manner approached the Frenchman and tapped him on the shoulder.

"It was a great occasion, wasn't it," he said. "I would like to have heard you make a speech though. Somehow you fellows know how to say just the right thing. Well, congratulations anyway."

Whereupon the bluff old sailor passed on his way shaking hands with acquaintances right and left while the Frenchman still continued looking for his carriage.

Finally it arrived and the ambassador and his wife drove away, but they followed in the wake of the German party. For once France gave way to Germany.

TRUESDELL IN DOUBT ABOUT TRUSTEESHIP

His Ideas Concerning Waggaman's Affairs Have Changed Since He Reached Washington.

Will George S. Truesdell accept the position of trustee of the bankrupt estate of Thomas E. Waggaman? If not, why not?

These are the new questions that are on the already harassed minds of the unsecured creditors of the real estate broker. Since his arrival in Washington on Thursday the former District Commissioner has not shown an overwhelming desire to jump into the control of what property there may be in the estate of Waggaman.

Notwithstanding the fact that his almost unanimous election by the unsecured creditors on November 12, was due, to a great extent, to the announcement by Attorney J. J. Darlington at the meeting which preceded the one at which the election was held, to the effect that Mr. Truesdell had wired from Paris that he would serve as trustee if elected.

It may be that the idea Mr. Truesdell had of the condition of Waggaman's affairs when the ocean lay between him and the District of Columbia was quite different from the idea he has formed since his arrival in Washington.

In fact this is the reason given by some of those interested for Truesdell's apparent lack of fervor. Mr. Truesdell himself says he has not had time to look into the matter and cannot decide until he has an opportunity to make an investigation.

Even should he decide to accept, said Mr. Truesdell, he could not announce his decision until his election is formally approved by Justice Anderson. Justice Anderson will take action in the matter tomorrow.

Opinion as to Mr. Truesdell's decision is equally divided. Several of his friends take the view that he will decline, but an equal number say he will accept.

ticket wagon of the Barnum & Sells ticket wagon of the Barnum & Sells Brothers circus was robbed today of nearly $30,000 at Tarboro, N. C. The money had been reserved to pay off employees after the show disbanded to-night to go into winter quarters.

Every employee of the show was arrested and searched, but all were discharged except the guard who had been placed over the safe, who was temporarily absent about the time of the robbery.

On account of the robbery the sale of the show for partition to the heirs of the estate under the will of the late Peter Sells, which was set for Tarboro at noon, was postponed until next week.
